Fatal accident

Crash kills Harvard student, injures others

A Harvard student was killed and several others were injured after the car they were riding in crashed in New Jersey on Monday morning.

The interim dean of the university's undergraduate college sent an email to school community members on Monday informing them of the crash. The students were traveling back to Harvard after a weekend competition in Virginia. The identity of the student and what type of competition were not revealed. GLOBE

Accused 'Puppy Doe' abuser faces larceny charges

The man accused of torturing and abandoning a dog known as "Puppy Doe" was recently indicted for stealing from an elderly Quincy woman for whom he was supposed to act as a caretaker.

Radoslaw Czerkawski, 32, formerly of Quincy, was indicted Friday for larceny over $250, larceny over $250 from a person over the age of 60 and attempted larceny, according to the Norfolk district attorney's office. He will be arraigned today. METRO

Men get at least 10 years in jail for human trafficking

Sentencing. One of the victims said she felt "hopeless and lost" because of what the men did to her.

Saying that they used women as "property," a judge sentenced a pair of Roxbury men, believed to be the first in the state convicted of the new human trafficking law, to at least 10 years in jail.

A Suffolk Superior Court judge on Monday sentenced Tyshaun McGhee, 33, to 10 to 15 years in jail and Sidney McGee, 30, to 10 to 12 years in jail.

"They essentially treated these women as property to be sold for money," said Judge Diane Kottmyer.

After a five-day trial and about two days of deliberations, a jury found the men guilty last week of three counts each of trafficking a person for sexual servitude. McGhee was also convicted of two counts of deriving support from prostitution. The jury acquitted them on counts of aggravated rape. A Suffolk district attorney's office spokesman said they believe the men are the first to be convicted under the law.

Prosecutors said the men recruited drug-addicted women in September 2012, supplied them with narcotics and promises of wealth and then coerced them into sexual activity with men who answered online ads.

Assistant District Attorney Jennifer OKeeffe requested that each man serve 15 to 21 years and called the men's actions "despicable."

The state's human trafficking law was enacted in 2012 after several pushes to get Massachusetts lawmakers to pass a bill. Massachusetts was one of the last states to pass a human trafficking law.

Impact statement

Victim speaks of hopelessness

During the trial, two of the women testified against the men. One of them submitted a victim impact statement to be read during Monday's sentencing.

"When I was first victimized, my self-esteem and self-worth were crushed. I felt hopeless and lost," the woman wrote in her statement. "Since this crime has occurred, I have not been able to maintain an intimate relationship with another male due to flashbacks of physical trauma. I have had a hard time this past year maintaining my sobriety because I have not wanted to deal and face what happened."

Woman hit by MBTA bus in Dorchester

Police investigate the scene where an MBTA bus hit a person crossing Columbia Road in Uphams Corner Monday morning. / NICOLAUS CZARNECKI, METRO

An elderly Dorchester woman was severely injured Monday when she was struck by a Route 41 MBTA bus in Uphams Corner.

She was hit near 595 Columbia Road around 11:35 a.m., as the bus was making a left-hand turn from Dudley Street, according to MBTA Transit Police Superintendent-in-Chief Joseph O'Connor.

It is not clear what caused the crash, but investigators are looking at all possible causes, including solar glare.

Quoted

"Investigators are looking at all factors to try and determine what happened, but no cause has been determined at this time."

O'Connor

The victim, 70, was taken to Boston Medical Center with "very serious injuries," O'Connor said.

There was no update on her condition as of press time Monday.

The driver was also taken to the hospital, though he had no visible injuries, and was subjected to drug and alcohol testing as is standard procedure in an incident of this nature. MORGAN ROUSSEAU

Family, friends, police search for missing BU alum

A big night out.
Those who know Eric Munsell said he was last seen with friends celebrating his birthday Saturday night in Boston.

Family members and friends of a recent Boston University graduate are searching for him after the 24-year-old went missing after a night out celebrating his birthday.

Eric Munsell, who lives in the North End, was last seen Saturday night by friends who had joined him at Market on Broad Street to celebrate his birthday that day, Boston police and his family and friends said.

"This kid is not a troublemaker. This kid is the most straight-laced kid in the world. It makes no sense that he just disappeared. He doesn't show up to work … [Monday]? No way. That's not Eric. Something bad happened," Munsell's father, Keith Munsell, said during a telephone interview as he checked into a Boston area hotel. He and Munsell's mother came to Boston to help in the search.

Munsell graduated from Boston University in 2012 and works for General Electric, his father said.

Boston police put out a missing person alert on Monday asking for the public's help to locate Munsell. They described Munsell as about 6 feet 1 inch tall, about 180 pounds and having a scar on his left cheek. Police said he was last seen wearing a blue checkered shirt and blue jeans.

Friends have created a Facebook page to gather support to locate Munsell.

Eric Munsell / BOSTON POLICE

One of his friends who created the group, Peter, said they were out at Market celebrating Munsell's birthday when he left the bar at about 11:30 p.m.

"We don't know where he went after he left the bar," said Peter, who did not want to give his last name.

Tsarnaev attorneys want 2015 trial

Defense attorneys for accused Boston Marathon bomber Dzhokhar Tsarnaev want a trial date no earlier than September 2015, according to court documents filed Monday.

Federal prosecutors and Tsarnaev's lawyers are due in federal court in Boston Wednesday morning for a status conference. The meeting will be the first since U.S. Attorney General Eric Holder gave the go-ahead for federal prosecutors to pursue the death penalty against the 20-year-old.

Also included in a joint status report filed Monday: Prosecutors estimate that the trial will last three months, plus another six months if he is convicted. Tsarnaev and his older brother Tamerlan are accused of setting off two bombs at the Boston Marathon finish line, killing three people and injuring more than 260 others. They are also accused of killing MIT Police Officer Sean Collier days after the attack. Tamerlan Tsarnaev died in a police shootout. Tsarnaev will not appear at Wednesday's hearing. MORGAN ROUSSEAU

Walsh takes to Facebook for questions

Social media. Boston Mayor Marty Walsh took inquiries about education, innovation and a few other topics.

In a 30-minute live exchange on Facebook yesterday, Boston's new mayor answered a plethora of questions from residents, most of whom adhered to the city's request that the discussion stay focused on education and innovation.

During the Q-and-A, Mayor Marty Walsh said he supports lifting the cap on charter schools, and told one parent to contact his office directly to look into allegations of bullying that the parent said had gone unaddressed by teachers.

Many questions surrounded school funding.

"We are actually investing an additional $36 million in our schools next year. There's always more to do, as we are [facing] significant challenges [as] state and federal sources continue to decline," Walsh said.

Some participants veered off topic and into the arena of gun control, traffic and alcohol licensure. Walsh obliged, saying he supports residents' constitutional right to carry guns, as well as City Councilor Ayanna Pressley's legislation that would eliminate the cap on alcohol licenses for restaurants.

In response to a complaint about South Boston traffic, Walsh said there is "a discussion of a traffic plan underway."

More online discussions are expected soon, he said.

"Social media is an opportunity to directly connect with constituents in real time, and engage on a personal level," Walsh said in response to one participant. "These conversations are a fantastic way for me to hear what is on your mind, and I use this information to inform what we focus on in the city. Where I can, I always want to hear directly from constituents."

US envoy invitation is withdrawn for North Korea visit

No explanation. It is unknown why U.S. special envoy Robert King's invitation was rescinded.

The White House said on Monday it was "deeply disappointed" by North Korea's decision to rescind an invitation to U.S. envoy Robert King to visit Pyongyang to discuss the release of imprisoned U.S. missionary Kenneth Bae.

The White House remains prepared to send King, the U.S. special envoy for North Korean human rights issues, to North Korea [the Democratic People's Republic of Korea], White House spokesman Jay Carney said.

"We are deeply disappointed by the DPRK decision for a second time to rescind its invitation for Ambassador King to travel to Pyongyang to discuss Kenneth Bae's release," Carney told reporters.

Bae, a 45-year-old Korean-American, has been held for more than a year in North Korea after being sentenced to 15 years of hard labor on charges of trying to overthrow the state.

A delegation including a retired U.S. diplomat now in North Korea is not visiting at Washington's behest, a U.S. official said on Monday.

Chat. Christie request for Hoboken mayor interview rebuffed

Dawn Zimmer, the mayor of Hoboken, N.J., rebuffed a request by lawyers for the office of Gov. Chris Christie to interview her about her claims that his administration threatened to withhold Hurricane Sandy aid if she didn't back a real estate development project.

Randy Mastro, an attorney representing Christie's office, sent letters Feb. 4 seeking documents and interviews with Zimmer and four city employees. On Feb. 6, Zimmer's lawyer Gerald Krovatin declined the request, writing that the mayor and the city are already cooperating with a probe by U.S. Attorney Paul Fishman in Newark, N.J.

"We question whether it is appropriate for the governor's office, in essence, to be investigating itself, particularly when an investigation of the same subject matter is being conducted by the U.S. attorney's office," Krovatin wrote to Mastro of Gibson Dunn & Crutcher LLP. BLOOMBERG

4 Tips on slashing your grocery bill

Money. Melissa D'Arabian, the host of Food Network's "Ten Dollar Dinners" shares her tips.

Melissa D'Arabian, host of "Ten Dollar Dinners," might have her hands full with four daughters and a TV show, but she still makes saving money a priority. She even partnered with CouponsForChange.org, where shoppers can save money and feed a child simply by using coupons. Here, she shares her top four tips on spending less for more.

Bonus tip

Try a new cut of meat

Boneless, skinless chicken breasts are easy to cook and low in fat, but they're not the only source of protein. D'Arabian confesses that she was reluctant to try different cuts of meat until she lived in France and saw people using chicken thighs and legs. "Braising is such a great way to extract amazing flavor from the cheapest cuts of meat," she says.

Find your loss leader

1 D'Arabian says grocery stores will typically offer a "loss leader": a special deal on meat to draw in customers. She suggests looking at the front page of a grocery store flier when deciding where to make your shopping trip. "That's where they're going to put their best protein deals, and then you can decide if you want it or not," she explains. D'Arabian also says though space is often a commodity in urban areas, it doesn't hurt to grab an extra pack or two of your favorite proteins when they're on sale to pop in the freezer.

Front-load your meal with cheap protein

2 D'Arabian says an easy way to stretch pricey cuts of meat is to start meals with inexpensive proteins like beans or eggs. She says this is especially useful when serving guests. "If you do a black bean hummus or white bean and tomato bruschetta and people fill up on these nice, fiber and protein-filed gems, they're going to sit down at the table not ravenously hungry," she says. "They're going to naturally eat less and not feel like they got cheated."

Have a 'bean night'

4 D'Arabian says she has what she calls a "bean night" once a week. She doesn't always serve beans, but the main course will always consist of very inexpensive proteins. "Having one 'bean night' or scrambled eggs night in your schedule is automatically going to save the average family a ton of money," she says. D'Arabian likes making dishes like crustless quiche, beans and eggs or quinoa with beans or lentils on these nights. You'd be surprised at how many recipes there are using these cheap, but yummy proteins.

Buy the cheapest produce

3 Instead of heading to the grocery store knowing what fruits and vegetables you want to buy in advance, D'Arabian suggests waiting until you get there to see what the best deals are. "Unlike everything else, whatever is cheapest in produce is also what is best," she says. "We think if we spend more money, we'll get something better, but when there's an overstock that pushes prices down and that means it's in season." D'Arabian also says it's key not to turn up your nose at frozen vegetables, which are convenient, nutritious and inexpensive.

Olympics! The fame, the glory — the curling pants?

Medals schmedals, y'all. Who cares who is winning what when there are funny pants involved, specifically those worn by the Norwegian curling team. The team first made a fashion splash in Vancouver in 2010 by donning the vibrant gear, made by Loudmouth Golf, and now they are continuing the tradition in Sochi. A Facebook page honoring their outlandish trousers — called The Pants Army — has racked up more than 545,000 followers. They wear a different pair for each game — and are singlehandedly keeping the sport of curling interesting.

Meanwhile, Johnny Quinn, the U.S. bobsledder who went viral a few days ago after he tweeted a photo of having to break down his stuck bathroom door, found himself trapped again, this time in an elevator. "No one is going to believe this," he wrote, "but we just got stuck in an elevator." Quinn was with teammate Nick Cunningham and U.S. Bobsled technical director David Cripps at the time. Cripps couldn't resist tweeting a joke. "Now we're stuck in the elevator! Can [Quinn] get us out?"

And last, but not least, is poor Bob Costas, who is suffering from pink eye and is being forced to wear glasses. The debacle has its own hashtags (#saveBobCostaseye, #pinkisthenewblack) and even its own Twitter handle (@BobCostasEyes).

Talking point

Meet the poet, Kristen Stewart

Kristen Stewart reveals to Marie Claire that instead of throwing herself into film work following her breakup with Robert Pattinson, she spent most of 2013 taking road trips with friends, working on her poetry and discovering things about herself — like the fact that she doesn't necessarily have a type. "You don't know who you will fall in love with. You just don't. You don't control it," she says. Another thing she's learned? It's OK to not be good at being a celebrity. "I'm just not very good on TV, and it's not my main goal in life to get good at it."

Sochi problems

Well, that was quick. New York City designer Michael Miller (@mychelmiller) has created this #sochiproblems T-shirt that shows off the laughably tragic Olympic ring malfunction from Friday's opening ceremony. It'll set you back $22.95, which is probably the yearly salary of the poor Russian lighting technician who was in charge of making sure all of the rings appeared, and who is now having a nice "vacation" in Siberia.

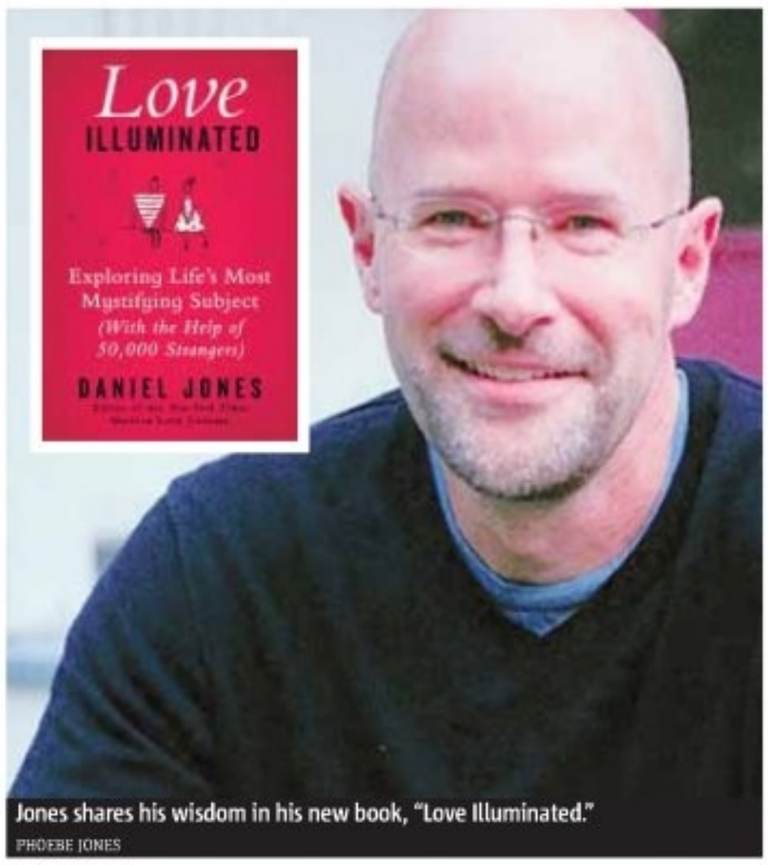
Love lessons from 'Modern Love' editor Daniel Jones

Valentine's Day. New York Times editor Daniel Jones reveals what he's learned after 10 years of editing the "Modern Love" column.



Jones shares his wisdom in his new book, "Love Illuminated."
PHOEBE JONES

In honor of Valentine's Day, we called up Daniel Jones and got him to reveal some of the biggest love lessons he's learned after reading the roughly 50,000 stories that have landed in his inbox.

If the idea of dating overwhelms you, get offline. "There's this belief that the more people you meet or go out with, the more chance you have of finding that one special person," Jones says. "But from what I've seen, people have much better luck starting with a small group instead of searching for that perfect person within dozens and dozens."

Jones tells us that even with the popularity of online dating, people are still falling in love the same ways as in the past: by meeting people through friends, work or hobbies. "Less is more," he says. "Go on a trip with a small group of people or join a club based on your interests."

Recognize the difference between a coincidence and a sign. How do you know if something is truly a "sign" that you've found the perfect person? "A sign is meaningful if it says something about you or what you want in a relationship," Jones says. Sharing the same birthday or having a random friend in common doesn't say anything about you; it's just a coincidence.

There's no substitute for physical chemistry. While not doubting the strong emotional bonds that can be made online, Jones warns it doesn't always translate into physical chemistry. "Sharing your deepest emotions online feels so close, but it's not," he says. "It's a controlled relationship that only exists in one narrow area. A real relationship involves the whole person."

Love in pieces

Fragmented relationships can be fulfilling, but not forever

"In the dating world, it's easy to break yourself up into pieces and have sex with someone without caring about that person and then have a really deep connection with someone you don't have sex with," Jones says. And it isn't always a bad thing; it just shows you aren't ready to be in a full relationship. "When you're in school, in your first job or your 20s, not everyone wants the responsibility of a full relationship," he explains. But if you do want the real thing, you have to give it your all.

You can try to ignore the abundance of pink and red and heart-shaped boxes of chocolate, but Valentine's Day is still happening. Whether you're coupled up, happily single or not-so-happily single, this Hallmark holiday can make you even more aware of your relationship status.

No matter what it is, there are three new books that will have you feeling the love. And no, none are self-help books, because you're perfect just the way you are.

'Never Have I Ever: My Life (So Far) Without a Date'

By Katie Heaney

Not only has 25-year-old Katie Heaney never had a boyfriend, she's never been on a second date.

There's nothing "wrong" with her — it just hasn't happened. But her memoir is far from a woe-is-me story. You'll laugh right along with her as she decodes Facebook messages and mulls over the continuous advice from her friends.

For the online addict

'A Million First Dates'

By Dan Slater

Writer Dan Slater takes readers behind the scenes of online dating, interviewing the curators of the sites about how their values play into their matchmaking. Slater examines how modern dating has changed our thoughts about the meaning of love, fate and commitment. If anything, it's great fodder for your next meetup.

'The Longest Date: Life as a Wife'

By Cindy Chupack

Former "Sex and the City" writer Cindy Chupack turns stories from her early years of wifedom into comical, relatable tales. More sobering, she talks about her struggles with infertility and longing to have a child, which really gives this book its heart.

Harry Potter does Orlando

This summer, Universal Orlando Resort will open its long-awaited Diagon Alley expansion of The Wizarding World of Harry Potter. The new whimsically themed area will double the size of the sweeping zone already dedicated to Potter's enchanting world, bringing even more of the boy wizard's adventures to life. The expansion will span both theme parks: Universal Studios Florida and Islands of Adventure.

Just like in the books and movies, guests will travel between the two areas aboard the Hogwarts Express.

By land and by sea

Loews Royal Pacific Resort is one of the hotels near Universal Orlando Resort. Visit www.royalcaribbean.com/finacruise for booking details. / UNIVERSAL

Skip the mouse.

Royal Caribbean makes Universal Orlando Resort its new port of call for family fun.

The idea of a family vacation often evokes anxious visions straight out of a "National Lampoon" film. But not all trips with the kids have to put stress on parents, or cater only to the little critters.

As part of Royal Caribbean International's collaboration with Universal Orlando Resort, vacationers of all ages can spend 10 days getting the best adventures of both land and sea.

The cruise package starts off with a few days at Universal Orlando Resort, followed by a week of island-hopping through the Caribbean aboard the Freedom of the Seas cruise ship.

Thrill rides like Transformers: The Ride, Despicable Me: Minion Mayhem and The Simpsons Ride are just a few of the ways to keep the adrenaline going during your time at Universal.

Included in the package and just steps from the park, Loews Royal Pacific Resort offers a lavish but family-friendly option for on-land accommodations in a lush, South Seas-themed environment that really prepares sea-bound travelers for the next leg of their journey.

The vacation then sweeps guests to Freedom of the Seas, a luxurious ship that departs from Port Canaveral and offers a plethora of pools, bars, restaurants, theater, casinos, shopping and, perhaps most importantly, well-managed child care.

The daycare and nursery keeps kids of all ages amused with games, crafts and activities from early morning into the evening, and is included in the cost of the cruise.

The vacation wraps up with a stop in colorful St. Maarten, which has no shortage of gift shops and eateries just steps from the ship.

Overall, the action-packed vacation is sure to send a jolt of sunny adrenaline to the hearts of youngsters and kids-at-heart as they are whisked away from the humdrum of everyday life.

Pretty sights

A Jaunt in St. Thomas

The Freedom cruise ship also stops in balmy St. Thomas, but because cruisers only get one day on the island, any excursions should be planned ahead of time. The glass-bottom Kon Tiki Sightseeing and Beach Cruise is a must for anyone looking to get a glimpse of historic St. Thomas Harbor. With a stop over a coral reef, the excursion peaks with a swimming excursion on a white sand beach, and winds down with dancing, party games and a limbo contest. The beach cruise offers onboard lunch options and plenty of island-inspired rum drinks for the grown-ups.

See beautiful St. Thomas on your voyage. / PROVIDED

Make a splash!

Freedom of the Seas makes a stop in CocoCay, Royal Caribbean's private island destination, which features one of the Bahamas' largest water parks. Daredevils can brave a 40-story drop on one of the world's largest inflatable water slides.

Freedom offers a variety of indoor activities for all ages, including a 3-D movie theater, indoor skating rink Studio B and the Arcadia Theater, where musicals, comedy and magic shows all included in the cruise fare.

Family-friendly discos evolve into adults-only venues late at night, while the On Air Club karaoke bar gives any songbird's voice a chance to soar.

The Freedom of the Seas will tour you around the Caribbean. PROVIDED

NYFW: Tommy Hilfiger takes us to the slopes

Fashion week diary

Follow our editors' diaries as they take you behind the scenes of NYFW.

Sunday

12:45 p.m.
After hitching a ride with some editor friends being chauffeured in a blue Bentley (score!) I've arrived at DKNY a bit early. So I have a look at the press notes, which say the collection, called New York Mash Up, will be about "old school/new school," "chic with street" and "real people/real style."

1:15 p.m.
People are cheering. That never happens. Runway shows are generally serious affairs filled with poker-faced models and fashionistas. But here, Donna Karan and team have replaced the usual waif-y mannequins with a mix of artists, writers, DJs, performers and girls about town — Angel Haze, A$AP Illz and Hannah Bronfman are getting the loudest woo-hoos — to drive home the collection's "real people/real style" theme. The "models" are all so diverse and United Colors of Benetton-y with their perfectly high cheekbones, mussed fros and elaborate tattoo sleeves. When did "real" New York become so pretty?

But we're here to talk about the clothes, and it's frankly nice to see them on a wider range of bodies. The collection is built around black — that classic New York go-to color — with a few graphic moments of white, navy, pink, gray and yellow mixed in. What stands out is how edgy the clothes have become. Five years ago, I associated DKNY with cute dresses for that entry-level job. But the collection has evolved to a place that feels a little more left-of-center, cooler and in tune with the brand's streetwear roots. Standouts include the range of outerwear such as a fur-sleeved parka and a series of graphic, striped shearling coats. KENYA HUNT

11:10 a.m.
Cue a round-up of Instagrams with captions that say things like "apres-chic." The Park Avenue Armory has been transformed into an Alpine village with snow capped mountains and pine trees, which make a fitting backdrop for the tartan plaid that surfaces in every Tommy Hilfiger collection.

11:35 p.m.
The first look? Surprise surprise, it's plaid. An olive parka, check dress and hiking boots opens the lineup of rugged, outdoorsy looks. The clothes are steeped in Americana; these aren't St. Mortiz snow bunnies. Instead, the vaguely vintage-flavored duffle coats, shearling jackets, chunky sweaters, fair isle knits and fleece dresses have a sporty athleticism to them that imply Tommy's girls do more than sip hot chocolate inside a lodge. The mix of mountaineering and country Western references work well, giving his sportswear a sense of newness and taking it away from his usual collegiate territory. You have to give him credit for reinventing his trademarks season after season. And it doesn't get more classic Hilfiger than this. KH

Parenting with earbuds

Most of the opinions you hear about your parenting techniques you didn't want to hear in the first place. 'Mom and Dad Are Fighting'

Slate magazine is a power player in the podcast game, tapping the quintessential intellectuals that roam its halls (and its website) with shows like the Culture Gabfest, the feminist XX Gabfest and the sports podcast that's not just for jocks, Hang Up and Listen. Their new parenting podcast has editors and contributors Allison Benedikt and Dan Kois discussing the latest in parenting news, along with smart guests who share their parenting fails or triumphs. Press download on this one before you have a lot to catch up on.

The Longest Shortest Time

'The Longest Shortest Time'

Billing itself as a "3 a.m. bedside companion for new parents," this show is smart, funny and held together by heartrending, beautifully told stories. Writer, mom and radio producer Hillary Frank generates segments that bring out the best in both parents and audio production. It's good for your brain and your heart.

Listen when: Everyone is asleep and you're lonely.

'Manic Mommies'

Laughing at the trials of parenting is a huge part of making the unpleasant moments bearable — which is why working moms Erin Kane and Kristin Brandt have segments like "What's on My Clothes This Week." With banter plus solid advice, they fearlessly go forth into "having it all," supported by their active community and fans.

Listen when: You're bunching the 6 millionth sock from the laundry pile, with a glass of wine handy.

Say anything (unless you're Palestinian)

Re: 'Reports on Kerry not balanced' (Metro, Feb. 10) Letter writer Daniel Brooks claims mainstream news sources, even Metro, focus on Israeli dissatisfaction with Secretary of State John Kerry rather than Palestinian protests against Kerry. However, Mr. Brooks' acknowledgment that "the PA Palestinian Authority does not allow dissent" should clarify why a Palestinian protest is not taken seriously by most of the Western press. Which citizen dissent is more likely to be genuine: The Israeli who can support or criticize his government, or the Palestinian who is told to support or criticize his government? A Palestinian echoing his government's policies is not newsworthy and possibly even false. Israelis are free to say anything, unlike people in Palestine and almost the entire Middle East region.

Germany should take bigger but nonviolent role in world

German president Joachim Gauck is interested in a bigger military role for Germany. He recently said, "When the last resort — sending in the Bundeswehr [German armed forces] — comes to be discussed, Germany should not say no on principle." Although Germany needs to take a more active role in foreign countries, that role should not be a military one but rather helping other countries nonviolently. If this is done in time and with adequate resources, it will help more than military action. This is true for all countries, but, given its history, especially Germany.

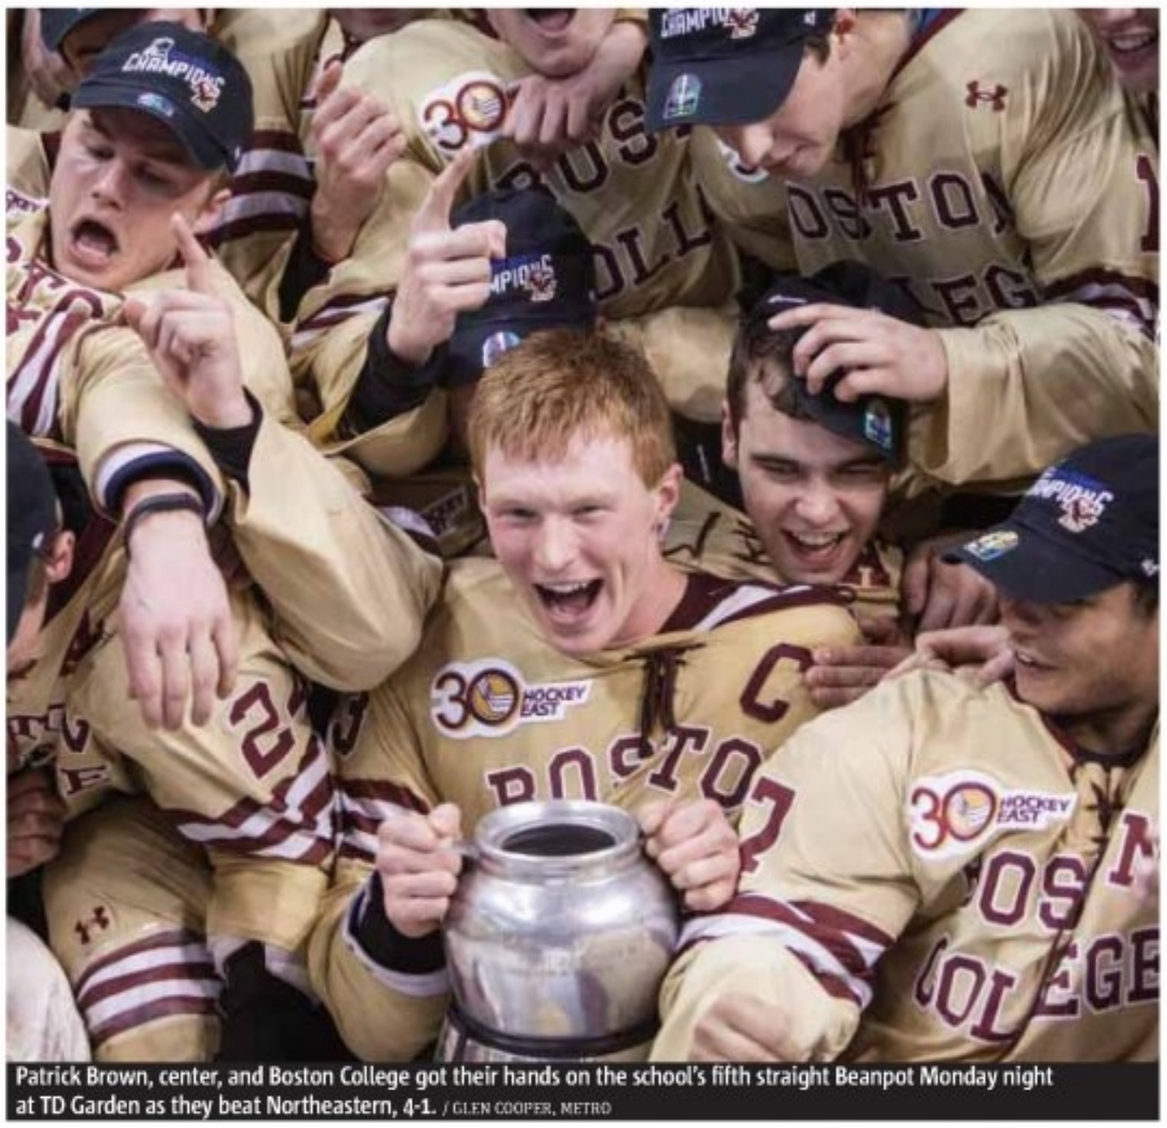
Eagles fly high again, capture 2014 Beanpot

NCAA. Boston College won its fifth straight Beanpot trophy and extended NU's title drought yet again.



Patrick Brown, center, and Boston College got their hands on the school's fifth straight Beanpot Monday night at TD Garden as they beat Northeastern, 4-1. / GLEN COOPER, METRO

Boston College remains the king of Hub hockey for yet another year while Northeastern's Beanpot drought is now creeping up on three decades.

The Eagles stunned the Huskies with a late third period surge to win, 4-1, and capture their fifth consecutive tournament trophy.

Boston College captain Patrick Brown silenced a boisterous Northeastern crowd with 14:30 gone in the third period as he redirected an Isaac MacLeod shot past Huskies goaltender Clay Witt while falling to the ice. The score put BC up, 2-1, and Northeastern collapsed thereafter as Johnny Gaudreau scored on an empty net and Brown added another.

The Eagles certainly sweated for the 19th Beanpot crown in school history, however, as Ryan Belonger nearly gave the Huskies an early advantage in the first. The referees ruled that just before Belonger's rebound effort crossed the goal line, the net was dislodged and the goal was waived off.

Northeastern's lone goal came in the second period off a BC turnover as John Stevens beat Thatcher Demko on a backhand.

It was one of the few slips Demko had in the tournament as the freshman had a remarkable 56 saves on 58 shots between Monday and last week's win over BU.

Demko won the Eberly Trophy for top tournament goaltender and Eagles forward Kevin Hayes won the tournament MVP award.

Boston College's 19 Beanpot crowns are second only to Boston University's 29 tournament victories.

By the numbers

5

Boston College captured its fifth straight Beanpot championship Monday night with a 4-1 win over Northeastern. It was the school's 19th Beanpot title since the tournament began in 1952.

2014 NFL Draft

Gay football player, Sam, could be targeted by Pats

The Patriots are in need of a defensive upgrade, as their defense once again lagged behind the offense in terms of respectability.

Missouri defensive lineman Michael Sam's name was on the radar of draftniks prior to Sunday night, but when Sam announced to the world that he was gay, he immediately became the most recognizable face in the draft, outside of Johnny Manziel.

The social impact of Sam entering the league — he will likely be the first openly gay player drafted in a major sport — will be discussed in great detail. But, on the surface, it appears as though teams like the Pats will only be asking questions like, "Can he play?"

"We're about winning," Pats owner Robert Kraft told the Boston Herald. "And anyone who can come in here and help us win, I personally don't care what their ethnic background is, their racial background, the gender preference. If they can help us win, and they're about team first, then I'm happy to have him here." METRO
